Moringa: Tropical all-rounder in radical quality

The visually inconspicuous moringa tree, which originally comes from the Himalayan region of northwest India, has numerous names, such as "horseradish tree", "tree of life" or "miracle tree". As diverse as the names of this multi-talent are, so is its use: traditionally, the leaves as well as the roots, fruits and seeds of this extremely fast-growing tree are consumed, which makes it an interesting food source in many tropical and subtropical regions.

Moringa oleifera has earned the title of "miracle tree": almost all parts of the tree are edible or can be used in other ways, the leaves in particular are praised as being particularly rich in nutrients, which is why Moringa is often called a "power food". In Europe, it is the dried leaves that are particularly popular as a finely ground powder. Since the powder of the "horseradish tree" has a certain pungency and the taste is reminiscent of mustard oil, the application as capsules is pleasant - for Biogena Bio-Moringa 500, 500 mg of high-quality leaf powder are filled into each capsule. A premium leaf powder from the country of origin, India, was deliberately chosen, with the greatest value placed on controlled organic cultivation. Bio-Moringa 500 is therefore a pure organic preparation.

In its country of origin, India, the "tree of life" plays an important role in Ayurvedic tradition and numerous positive properties are attributed to it. Research on this miracle tree is still ongoing and we can expect the announcement of further positive abilities of this extraordinary plant.
